

Things to think about

- In what ways can artists help us to explore the complexities of climate change?
- How do artists have the potential to bring a personal and human perspective to this topic?
- Do artists working with the theme of climate change have a responsibility to use environmentally friendly materials and methods? Why or why not?
- What are the benefits of artists and scientists working together?
- Do today's artists have a moral duty to engage with, or at least acknowledge, important contemporary issues such as climate change? Why or why not?
- Why is it important to have artists from different cultural backgrounds working together on global issues such as climate change?
- Discuss: can works of art dealing with disaster and destruction still be considered beautiful?
- If you were to make a work of art exploring the theme of climate change, which issues would you most like to raise?